Merging of Artistry and Technology, Future Skill Sets

January 31st, 2025 / 9AM-5PM

What will affect our growth and value in the future and how you can control its outcome. We are at an exciting time where artistry, technology, products, and processes are shaping our industry. In today's evolving market place, the importance of utilizing technology is paramount to our success. Yet the loss of the artistic process has had an effect on the market. Our goals for the future of the dental health industry are to provide esthetic, functional restorative options to support the physical and financial need of our patients. The technician's role will be more demanding in the future as we must have an understanding of each of the material options. Topics will include ceramic layering for both micro layering and esthetic management.

Course Objectives:

- Case management
- The importance of microlayering
- The use of technologies and artistry
- The importance of photographic communication and perception

Presented by Peter Pizzi, CDT, MDT, F.N.G.S.

As a dental educator for several years peter has found an easy transition into the lecture/clinician circuit. His personal appreciation and expertise on all phases of Clinical / Laboratory techniques including Crown and bridge, Ceramics, Implantology, muscle function, Color communication, Digital Photography and mandibular physiology have made him a source of knowledge and motivation for his peers. Peter's unique lecture ability and communication skills create a great learning environment. Peter has lectured to doctors and technicians throughout the United States, Europe and Asia on several different topics. He also continually studies with some of the world's top speakers and clinicians.
